

‘Literary speculators might prudently place their bets on H.E. BATES, whose Day’s End has the same quality of fastidious beauty which distinguished his novel The Two Sisters. Mr. Bates, like Katherine Mansfield, builds his tales with careful artistry around a trifling incident, a moment of fleeting, scarcely communicable emotion No epicure can afford to miss his work.’ Forum